

WOMAN ENDS LIFE
BY TAKING POISON

Mrs. Marie O'Callaghan, aged 20, mother of an 18-months-old baby girl, took poison and died last Saturday at the Villa sanitarium, on San Pedro avenue, Colma, where she had been engaged as a nurse for the past eight months. Before committing the rash deed she had penned two notes, one to a step-sister, Miss Rose Zappettini, of Stockton, and the other to the chief of police of Colma.

The beautiful young mother was the daughter of Armando Bresciani, a well known rancher of the Stockton district.

She was "tired of living," said one of the notes, in which she made arrangements for the adoption of her baby, Barbara, by Mrs. Jewel Lambdin, of 225 Genesee street San Francisco. She ended the note by saying, "I'll meet you in hell."

Both notes showed that the unhappy young woman had contemplated suicide for the past six years. On Saturday she swallowed sufficient cyanide, from which she suffered when a San Francisco physician was called to attend her Saturday afternoon. The girl had gone to bed before taking the poisonous draught and was in a deep coma when found by friends.

In the note to the chief of police of Colma, she requested that her body be cremated and the ashes scattered in San Francisco bay.

An inquest was held last Tuesday. A search is being made for O'Callaghan, who it is said was recently employed as a butcher in Redwood City. The girl's father informed the coroner, Dr. J. C. McGovern, that relatives would like to question O'Callaghan.

BOARD ACCEPTS
SHOP BUILDING

Formal acceptance of the new shop building constructed at the Jefferson Union high school was effected by resolution of the Board of Trustees at a special meeting held on Wednesday evening at 8 o'clock in the high school.

The building committee, consisting of Trustees Bentley and Gehringer, had previously gone over the building with the architect and Mr. C. Hackley, the instructor in auto mechanics, and Principal Ferguson, to check up on the details, and see that everything was complete according to the plans and specifications. After the report to the board by this committee that the work was completed, a resolution of acceptance was offered by Trustee Gehringer, seconded by Trustee Twisten, and passed unanimously.

Each member of the Board of Trustees, as well as the principal of the high school, expressed great satisfaction over the completion of the new shop building. The sentiment of the meeting was expressed by President Bentley when he remarked, during the proceedings, "This means educational development second only in importance to the organization of the school itself. The Jefferson Union high school district is becoming better equipped each year to meet the educational needs of the boys and girls."

A formal opening of the building will be held later, when the patrons of the school and the citizens in general will have an opportunity to inspect it.

AN ENJOYABLE MOTOR TRIP
THROUGH GREAT NORTHWEST

Mr. and Mrs. J. R. Bennett and daughter Georgina returned home last Friday after a very enjoyable motor trip to Vancouver, British Columbia, going by the Redwood highway, they stopped over in Seattle and visited Mr. and Mrs. Leonard McKee and family. They then spent a week in Vancouver with friends, enjoying the Canadian Pacific Exposition, which was open from August 7 to 17, also the Caledonian games, which they describe as having been wonderful. Returning home by way of Victoria and the Pacific highway, they had a very enjoyable time, with only two flat tires on the return trip. The weather was perfect during the entire trip.

JEFFERSON HIGH
EVENING CLASSES

Night school at the Jefferson Union high school will begin on next Tuesday evening, August 27. All adults who desire to enter the classes in Americanization or bookkeeping or typewriting should be present on Tuesday evening at 7 o'clock. The date of opening of the class in auto mechanics will be announced later. It will be not later than two weeks hence.

SETS NEW RECORD
FOR ATTENDANCE

The school year, 1929-30, began auspiciously on last Monday morning at Jefferson Union high school, with the enrollment of two hundred ninety-one pupils, eighty of whom were entering freshmen. This is the largest enrollment in the history of Jefferson High.

And no school session in Jefferson has ever begun more favorably, if one can judge by the spirit of the students and the eagerness with which they began their work.

The program for the new year had been arranged at the close of last semester, and each student had made out his schedule of work in accordance with this program. So the arranging of class work was simplified.

The chief problem was that confronted by Principal Ferguson where the enrollment in several of the classes was too large for the seating capacity of the rooms and too large for one instructor to handle. This required readjusting so that the work might be carried on for the present without adding another teacher to the faculty.

The impetus given to the shop work by the completion of the new building increased the enrollment in that department to the maximum. Already it is seen that an additional instructor will be needed very soon to supply the demand for this type of educational work.

The Science department, too, is full to overflowing; one class having forty-eight seeking admission. This is almost twice the enrollment that can be taken care of at one time. Other classes in the same condition are Civics, Spanish and English.

The new class in Music is popular, and the students have exhibited great enthusiasm.

In physical education the girls have already organized teams in basketball, handball, baseball and tennis. On the football field the husky boys who feel responsibility for upholding the honor of Jefferson High are already taking dives and spills, decked out in their white sweat-shirts. Classes are also being formed in basketball, tennis, and track, so that the work best fitted to the boy will be given in each case. Jefferson High surely begins the new school term of 1929-30 with excellent prospects for a most successful year in educational work.

PRETTY CEREMONY UNITES
COUPLE IN HOLY WEDLOCK

Miss Doris Muriel Brockhurst, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Brockhurst, of 375 San Diego avenue, became the bride of Carl Alec Gustavson last Saturday evening at George Washington Masonic Hall, on San Jose avenue, San Francisco. The ceremony was performed by Bishop R. Vance Pearson of the L. D. S. church, in the presence of about two hundred relatives and friends.

The pretty bride was gowned in ivory satin and her tulle veil was held in place by a tight fitting cap trimmed with lace and clusters of orange blossoms. Her bridal bouquet was a shower of baby roses and lilies of the valley. Miss Thais Woods was maid of honor. She wore a dainty gown of flowered georgette. Little Miss Annaliese Trautman was the flower girl, and Clyde Pearson was the groom's best man.

After the ceremony a reception was held for the young couple and during the evening a delightful musical program was enjoyed, after which dainty refreshments were served.

The bride and groom are now on a honeymoon motor trip to Preston, Idaho, where they will visit the groom's parents. Before returning home they will also visit in Utah and Yellowstone National Park.

Mr. Gustavson is the popular manager of the Daly City branch of Safeway stores. Upon their return they will make their home with the bride's parents indefinitely.

SPORTSMEN OF COUNTY TO MEET IN DALY CITY

There will be a meeting of the San Mateo County Fish and Game Protective Association, at the City Hall, Daly City, next Tuesday evening, August 27, at 8 o'clock. All fishermen and hunters of Daly City and vicinity are invited to be present at this meeting, as matters of vital interest will be discussed.

ALL STARS MEET DEFEAT IN TENTH

Smashing out three singles in the tenth inning to score the winning run, the Palo Alto Greys nosed out the Jefferson All Stars, 8 to 7, at Mayfield last Sunday. The contest was completed after three and a half hours of playing and was marred by numerous arguments.

Cliff Wysinger, the winning pitcher, was touched for sixteen hits by the All Stars, Lawrence Kennedy leading the attack with four hits in as many times at bat. Dan Modena collected three out of four to keep his batting average above .500 per cent. The longest hit of the day was Craig's home run in the fifth inning.

The Jefferson pitchers, Keagle and Creighton, allowed twelve hits, all of them being singles, struck out nine men and walked four batters.

Both teams turned in sparkling plays, the brightest of them all being Aiello's running catch in the fifth frame. He snared Wysinger's fly near the foul line and about 75 yards back of third base. Keagle made a sensational stop of a line drive in the fourth inning and threw to first to prevent a run from scoring.

HILLCREST CIRCLE, A. O. D.
INSTALLS NEW MEMBERS

Hillcrest Circle, A. O. D., added to their roll ten new members on Monday evening, August 12. The evening was one of the most interesting yet held by the Circle. Some of Daly City's finest are now on the Hillcrest Circle membership list. The Golden Poppy drill team of Ocean View exemplified the work, and those present were greatly impressed with the perfect manner in which it was done. Mrs. V. Lombard, who has done so much for the Circle, is still working hard and has several new members for September's meeting. By all accounts this order will be an outstanding organization of our city.

SAN MATEO COUNTY FIREMEN
HOLD MEETING IN DALY CITY

The San Mateo County Firemen's Association met last Tuesday evening at the City Hall, Daly City, when an interesting meeting was held. Mr. Rockwell, of the San Francisco fire department, and Mr. Lock, of the San Francisco Junior Chamber of Commerce, were the principal speakers of the evening.

Councilman Arthur Bodien welcomed the members of the association and their friends in behalf of the mayor, who was unable to attend.

After the meeting a supper was served at Company No. 3 fire house on Westlake avenue.

MERCHANTS WIN
FROM GUADALUPE

The Daly City Merchants defeated the Guadalupe Natives Sunday at the Jefferson Union high school grounds by the close score of 5 to 4. The Merchants were on the losing end going into the ninth inning. After filling the bases in the eighth and failing to score, the boys went right out and won the game in the last of the ninth. Hits by Randall and Retig brought Maloney to bat as a pinch hitter, he having been absent all afternoon and just arriving from a fishing trip. Maloney poked out a two-base hit, scoring one run. A hit by Drucker, sacrifice fly by Keane, and a hit by Cruchoff ended the game.

For the visitors, Harris starred at the bat. Rommel made some wonderful plays at third base. In fact the entire team played a great game on the field. They made two double plays. The home boys also turned in two double plays. Drucker again starred at bat. Maloney's hit is the talk of the town; it sewed up the game.

PRESBYTERIAN PASTOR HAS
TOPIC OF UNIQUE INTEREST

"The Seed is the Word," will be the text of Rev. J. R. Stevenson, of Grace Presbyterian church, on Sunday evening at 8 o'clock. Nature is apparently wasteful in her methods; a single plant has been known to produce two billion seeds in one year; 700,000,000 Bibles have been printed by the American and British Bible societies. Why this profound apparent waste? On Sunday this question will be dealt with. Mr. Davis, Hawaiian guitar player, who was unable to be present last Sunday, has signified his willingness to be present this Sunday evening.

FIND BODY OF BOY
IN YOSEMITE LAKE

The body of 12-year-old Forest Case, of Burlingame, who lost his life two months ago, has been recovered. The boy was drowned on June 29, when he went to Yosemite with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Alvord F. Case, of Burlingame. Wading in a lake, young Forest was caught in a swirl of water and carried over the brink of Vernal falls. His body dropped more than 300 feet into the pool, where for weeks all efforts to recover it failed. Park rangers last Monday were able to see the body, partly held by a rock, in the very spot where it fell, and notified the parents.

The body was brought back to Burlingame, funeral services being held last Wednesday. Interment was at Mt. Olivet cemetery.

RULING AGAINST WESTERN PACIFIC

Recommendation that the application of the Western Pacific for authority to build twenty-five miles of extension from San Francisco to Redwood City be not granted was made last Tuesday by Examiner O. D. Weed to the Interstate Commerce Commission, according to dispatches from Washington, D. C.

Denial of the application was recommended on the grounds that the extension was not in the interest of public convenience or necessity.

Officials of the Western Pacific declined to make any comment until they had read the full text of the report.

The recommendation of the examiner is not final, they pointed out. They declared that two previous adverse recommendations had been overruled by the Interstate Commerce Commission when the company took exception and presented an objection.

The Great Northern and Western Pacific jointly asked the Interstate Commerce Commission on Tuesday for permission to construct the 36 miles of track between Lookout, Modoc county, and Klamath Falls, Oregon, connecting the two lines.

The Yreka railroad, competitor line of the Southern Pacific, applied for permission to construct 35 miles of trackage between Yreka City and Etna.

The extension down the peninsula, which was recommended denied by Examiner Weed, would run along the bay shore from Quint street, San Francisco, to the county seat, and would permit the Great Northern, through the Western Pacific, to bring its transcontinental lines across the bay from Pinole. The extension was opposed by the Southern Pacific.

THE EAGLES NEST

The regular meeting of Colma-Vista Grande Aerie, Fraternal Order of Eagles, was held on Thursday evening of last week with a wonderful attendance. One hundred and five answered present.

Twenty-three candidates were initiated, and the class was a very significant one, for it showed some good material for the carrying on of the great work of the order.

The sick committee reported all brothers recuperating, and we wish to see them at the meetings in the very near future.

The social committee reported some good times were in the making and would be very active during the remaining part of the year.

The good will committee reported a general meeting of all the Aeries in the county for Thursday, August 22. Every member should be there, for we are to be the host to an enthusiastic crowd from Redwood City, Half Moon Bay, San Mateo and South San Francisco. A vaudeville program has been arranged and the social committee will be on hand. What more could you ask?

A nice crowd from South City was present at the last meeting. Worthy President Svehla and ten of their recent candidates favored us. A nice crowd, and we hope their presence at our meetings will be often.

It is convenient to point to an organization where nearly every member is a real co-operator, but only a few are go-operators.

The best team of co-operators may be good team workers—team workers to kill time or just to get by.

Give an organization a few go-operators and there will soon be more co-operators of the right kind.

Why don't you become one of the go-operators of the Eagles? It pays big dividends to you and to the Eagles as well. Co-operation means that acquiring go-operation that others can and will want to work with you and not against you. Co-operation is not go-operation in this case. A woman asked the grocer for some powder to kill cockroaches. The grocer asked her if she would take it with her. "No," she said, "I will send the cockroaches to you and you can sprinkle it on their tails."

Some people are as prominent in society and in an organization as a string of over-ripe bananas in a fruit stand, priced very low to get rid of them.

Some people are like a lighted cigar. They require active puffing.

We do not envy the jelly fish. He has no spine, no brain, no teeth. But also he has no backache, no headache, no toothache. What more does any poor fish want?

Fan Tan Players Get in Bad
Yon Kee, keeper of a fan tan game, was fined $50, and four others charged with frequenting a gambling house paid fines of $10 each, when brought before Police Judge Kertell at San Mateo. All were captured in a raid on the gambling house.

BOARD AWARDS
MANOR CONTRACT

Awarding contract for major improvements in the Blossom Heath Manor tract at Beresford, hearing protests against sewers on the Bayshore highway at Visitation valley, and setting a date for hearing of the petition for a lighting district at Millbrae Highlands were among the important matters considered by the San Mateo county board of supervisors last Monday in Redwood City.

The Union Paving Company of San Francisco was awarded the contract for improving Blossom Heath Manor. The bid was $79,223.50. The Hanrahan Company, through a representative, protested, as its bid was lower, being $58,227.20. The board held that the Hanrahan Company's bid was irregular, in that the type of paving was not stipulated. The project includes street paving, sidewalks, curbs, sewers, electroliners and a water system.

The Pacific Bone, Coal and Fertilizer Company of Visitation Valley, through Attorney Francis Gill, registered a protest against assessments against its property for the proposed Bayshore highway sewers. The company held that it already has adequate sewer, and claims that the assessment of $3.75 per front foot is too high. Robert Klassen, assistant county engineer, claimed that the company would have to pay as much as $14 per front foot if it waits to have the work done later.

September 16 was set as the date for the first hearing on the petition for formation of a Millbrae Highlands lighting district, presented by Attorney H. M. Childs of San Francisco.

Hearing on the petition for a Pescadero highway lighting district was continued until September 3.

The petition for abandonment of a portion of the Alameda de las Pulgas road above San Carlos was likewise continued until next regular meeting.

A request for a tax levy for $3,500 as San Mateo county's share for equipment and maintenance of the Bayshore highway district was filed with the board. It is for the 1929-30 fiscal year.

A petition with thirty-eight signatures from the Dumbarton Oaks Improvement Club, asking the board to zone the Dumbarton Oaks tract as a residential district with the exception of highway lots, was not acted upon because of the lack of a county zoning ordinance.

The Bayshore Improvement Club of Visitation Valley sent in a letter complaining of the speeding menace on Walbridge street. It was referred to the state traffic bureau for action.

The board was advised by the War Department that a public hearing would be held in Redwood City on the afternoon of September 3 to hear protests against a bridge across Redwood Creek in Redwood City, approximately 700 feet from Bradford street. Building of the bridge is sought by the state to carry the Bayshore boulevard across the creek.

Mrs. Virginia Pohl, deputy county auditor, was authorized to sign the bonds for the Belmont and Los Lomitas school districts, due to the serious illness of County Auditor J. J. Shields.

An amended map of the Beverly Hills subdivision at San Carlos was approved.

The Belmont water district asked for an appropriation of $1,200 for the district for the coming year. The Pulgas mosquito abatement district asked for $9,500 for the next fiscal year. The Bayshore fire district announced that it would need $1,500 for the coming year. These matters were referred to the county auditor.

P. T. A. RESUMES WORK
FOLLOWING VACATION

The members of the Woodrow Wilson-Vista Grande Parent-Teachers' Association held their first regular meeting after the summer vacation at the Woodrow Wilson school last Tuesday afternoon, the following new officers filling the chairs: Mrs. Eva Page, president; Mrs. Lena Smith, vice-president; Mrs. Anna Foss, recording secretary; Mrs. Minnie Sherwood, financial secretary; Mrs. Leona Light, treasurer; and Mrs. Frances Rickmann, parliamentarian.

A very interesting meeting was held and many plans made for the coming term.

Eleven new members were welcomed by the association, among them several teachers, thus making the teachers 100 per cent members. Seven teachers and Mrs. Lohr, the school nurse, were present at the meeting. All made short but interesting talks.

Plans were made to hold a program each meeting, the numbers to be furnished by the school children from these schools, also a surprise will be given to the class having the most mothers at each meeting. Beginning next meeting, refreshments will be served after the meetings.

OF STATE FAIR

By ROCKWELL D. HUNT

This is Diamond Jubilee year for the State Fair of California. Sacramento, the capital city, has been keenly alert to the significance of this event and has planned to provide for this seventy-fifth anniversary of the founding of the State Agricultural Society a grand setting that shall be both befitting and duly impressive.The classic is scheduled to begin August 31 and close on Admission Day, September 9.The State Fair has been for three-quarters of a century closely identified with the development of California in agriculture, horticulture, stock raising, industry and commerce.The first fair was held in San Francisco in October, 1854, the exhibits being transported in freight wagons drawn by oxen or mules, and the cattle show being held at Mission Dolores. Sacramento was the scene of the second fair in 1855, by which date California had been definitely established as possessing great agricultural potentialities. The following year the fair was held at San Jose, in 1857 at Stockton, and in 1858 at Marysville. In 1859 it returned to Sacramento City. A spirited contest arose as to where the 1860 fair should be held, ending in an amendment to the constitution of the Agricultural Society as follows: "The society shall hold an annual fair at the city of Sacramento"—thus settling permanently the question of location.A contemplation of the numerous and diverse functions of the State Fair awakens real admiration for the minds conceiving them and working devotedly for the advancement of the commonwealth. It has long since become a real factor, a great clearinghouse, in the material and cultural development of all parts of the state.As a dignified agency of publicity, it has amply justified the heavy costs involved in its continued maintenance.
"Just as great stores trim their windows and display the best they have," said Samuel H. Green of the California Dairy Council, "so California on this occasion displays the best it produces so that the world may see it.
It is California's great show window."The great state buildings at Sacramento are now in readiness for the superlative exhibits that will come.
The huge central structure, agricultural and manufacturers' pavilions and the new Machinery Hall are flanked with groups of smaller buildings, with long lines of stock barns, ideal mile race track and horse show amphitheatre, with an area of approximately 200 acres. The exhibits will include the finest specimens from the world-excelling agricultural production of the state, and the very acme of various breeds of live stock. A single county raises 225 different varieties of fruits, grains and vegetables.But this year is Diamond Jubilee year. The directors are not content to make the fair merely representative of all sections of the state, but have decided to include the group of Pacific states. Accordingly, states have been invited to prepare exhibits and thus magnify the jubilee event to dimensions of a "super-Tiffany.""We shall have a fair," said Governor Young, "that sets aside state boundaries and includes the entire West. It will be a mighty thing for the spirit of fellowship that it will build up." It is anticipated that the attendance will run close to half a million.The California State Fair has become a great educational factor, for it reveals in attractive manner tangible evidences of advancement in one of the world's most favored localities.
It is a huge mirror, reflecting the successful endeavors of the fruitful year, affording free interchange of ideas and suggesting new ideas for the continuous upbuilding of a better and nobler California. The jubilee exposition of 1929 will represent the marvelous cumulative results and achievements of three-quarters of a century in our loved commonwealth.
It is worthy of whole-hearted support.CALIFORNIA MARKSMEN youthful residents of California,

Washington, Oregon, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming, Utah and Nevada, thirteen outstanding candidates of this summer's Citizen's Military Training uphold the rifle shooting traditions of the West against crack shots from all parts of the United States in the annual national rifle matches to be held at Camp Perry, Ohio, from August 25 to September 15.Five of the thirteen youths were selected from students at the Del Monte, California, C. M. T. Camp.

These are Homer J. Lockwood, aged cisco."The time will come," shouted the corner, "next Friday night."P. T. A. MEETING HELD FRIDAY AT SAN MATEOThe first meeting of the year of the Seventeenth District, California Congress of Parents and Teachers, held at Central school in San Mateo on Friday, August 16, proved a most enlightening, encouraging and deligately interesting one.At the short business meeting it was decided to hold a regional conference in November in San Mateo.Mrs. Owens, chairman of parental education, announced that beginning October 2, Mr. Henry Grant would conduct a class for fathers in sex hygiene, at the Junior College. A current events and book review class is being planned for the mothers, to be held on Thursday mornings from 9:30 to 11 each week.Mrs. R. L. Cardiff, state president, then took charge of the meeting.Mrs. Benson, of San Francisco, state vice-president and health director, speaking on "Duties of Officers," said, "The success of a meeting depends on the skill of the presiding officer." Both Mrs. Benson and Mrs.

Cardiff stressed the importance of having by-laws and then adhering strictly to them, aptly calling them
"the road map of the association."Mrs. Kramer, of Oakland, state vice-president and director of home service, explained the duties of chairmen. The burden of P. T. A. work falls on the chairmen and publicity is the only way to educate the public in P. T. A. work.Each member should feel individually responsible and so assure the success of the whole organization, according to Mrs. Stuart Moore, of Stockton, vice-president and head of the department of extension.Need of program planning and the need of a definite program was brought out by Mrs. William Hayes, of Burlingame, state program chairman. She said the program of every association should be based on its activities; its activities grow from its needs; its needs grow from a survey, and a community survey should touch everything that touches the life of the child.Mrs. Bradford, of Sacramento, national vice-president, brought a message of hope and encouragement when she said the parent training classes sponsored by the state and the establishment of P. T. A. leadership courses in various colleges was the result of thirty years of steady and patient effort. The importance of parental education could not be over emphasized.The difference between spiritual and religious training was most ably brought out by Mrs. Dana Thomas, of San Jose, state chairman of spiritual training. The time children go astray is in their recreational life, and if they are trained spiritually in relation to others, to God, to their own ego, they will have something to cling to when temptation assails them.Mfs. Cardiff brought the meeting to a close. On September 20 the Seventeenth District P. T. A. will go to Pescadero for its annual picnic.
At noon the guests were entertained at luncheon at the Oak Tree Inn.Engineer predicts a fool-proof plane

Jim came in and sat down quietly. The old man had been very silent of late. Back in Dawson there was a man whom he hated with the hate that only death can end, but for the peace of his soul he strove to conquer it.

"I've been a-thinkin' out a scheme," said Jim suddenly, "an' I'm a-goin' to put all of that twenty-five thousand of mine back into the ground. I can't quit this minin' business."

"What's your scheme, Jim?"

"It's just this: I'm goin' to install a hydraulic plant on my Ophir creek claim. I'm goin' to begin a new era in Klondike minin'."

"What are you going to do?"

"Well, I've written out for piping an' a monitor, an' next spring I hope I'll have the plant in workin' order. The stuff's on the way now. Hullo! Come in!"

The visitors were Mervin and Hewson on their way to Dawson. These two men had been successful beyond their dreams. They were offensively prosperous; they reeked of success.

As I went on with my packing I paid but little heed to their talk. What mattered it to me now, this babble of dumps and dust, of claims and clean-ups? I was going to thrust it all behind me, blot it clean out of my memory, begin my life anew.

Then all at once I pricked up my ears. They were talking of the town, of the men and women who were making it famous (or rather infamous), when suddenly they spoke the name of Locasto.

"He's gone off," Mervin was saying; "gone off on a big stampede. He got pretty thick with some of the Peel River Indians, and found they knew of a ledge of high-grade, free-milling quartz somewhere out there in the Land Back of Beyond. So he's off with an Indian and one companion, that little Irish satellite of his, Pat Doogan. They'll be away all winter."

"What's become of that girl of his?" asked Hewson, "the last one he's been living with? You remember she came in on the boat with us. Poor little kid! That was a good little girl before he got after her."

Hewson growled like a wrathful bear, but Mervin smiled his cynical smile.

"Oh, you mean the Madonna," he said; "why she's gone on the dance halls."

They continued to talk of other things, but I did not hear them any more. I was in a trance, and I only aroused when they rose to go.

"Better say good-by to the kid here," said the Prodigal; "he's going to the old country tomorrow."

"No, I'm not," I answered sullenly; "I'm just going as far as Dawson."

He stared and expostulated, but my mind was made up. I would fight, fight to the last.

Berna on the dance halls—words cannot convey all that this simple phrase meant to me. For two months I had been living in a dull apathy of pain, but this news galvanized me into immediate action.

For although there were many de grees of dance-hall depravity, at the best it meant a brand of ineffaceable shame. She had lived with Locasto, had been recognized as his mistress—that was bad enough; but the other—to be at the mercy of all, to be classed with the barflies that preyed on the Man with the Poke, the vampires of the gold camp, Berna— Oh, it was unspeakable! The thought maddened me.

Bidding good-by to the big cabin, with my two partners looking ruefully after me, I struck off down Bonanza. All I thought of was Dawson and Berna.

I would make Berna marry me. I cared nothing for what had happened to her. I might be a pariah, an outcast for the rest of my days; at least I would save her, shield her, cherish her. The thought uplifted me, exalted me. What did it matter if physically they had wronged her? Was not the pure, virgin soul of her beyond their reach?

I was just in time to see the last boat go out.

As I strolled the streets I saw many a familiar face. I went into the Parisian restaurant, and there was Madam, harder looking and more vulgar, a creature of rapacity and sordid lust. I marched up to her and asked abruptly:

"Where's Berna?"

She gave a violent start. There was a quality of fear in her bold eyes. Then she laughed, a hard, farthing laugh.

"In the Tirol," she said.

Strange again! Now that the worst had come to pass, and I had suffered all that it was in my power to suffer, a new sense of strength and mastery had come to me. The greatest evil had befallen me. Life could do no more to harm me. I had everything to gain and nothing to lose. I cared for no man. I despised them, and, to back me in my bitterness, I had twenty-five thousand dollars in the bank.

I was still weak from my illness and my long musk had, wearied me, so I went into a saloon and called for drinks. I felt the raw whisky burn my throat. I tingled from head to foot with a strange, pleasing warmth. Where was that bitter feeling now? As I drank it all seemed to pass away. Magical change! What a fool I was! What was there to make such a fuss about? It was all a farce anyway. What would it matter a hundred years from now? Again I drank.

How wonderfully strong I felt! I smashed my clenched fist against the bar. My knuckles were bruised and bleeding, but I felt no pain. I ached to fight some one. Then all at once came the thought of Berna. It came with tragical suddenness, with poignant force. Intensely it smote me as never before.

I was drunk, deplorably drunk, and I was bound for the Tirol.

To the right as I entered the place was a palatial bar set off with burnished brass, beveled mirrors and glittering, vari-colored pyramids of costly liquors. Up to the bar men were belling, and the bartenders in white jackets were mixing drinks with masterly dexterity. To the left I had a view of the gambling room, a glimpse of green tables, of spinning balls, of cool men, with shades over their eyes, impassively dealing. There were huge wheels of fortune, keno tables, crap outfits, faro layouts, and, above all, the dainty, fascinating roulette. Everything was in full swing. In front of me was a double swing-door painted in white and gold, and, pushing through this, for the first time I found myself in a Dawson dance hall.

I sat down on a seat at the very back of the audience. Before me were row after row of heads, mostly rough, rugged and unwashed. Their faces were eager, rapt as those of children. They were enjoying, with the deep satisfaction of men who for many a weary month had been breathing the free, unbranded air of the Wild. The sight of a woman was thrillingly sweet; the sound of a song was ravishing. Looking at many of those toll grooved faces one could see that there was no harm in their hearts. They were honest, uncouth, simple; they were just like children, the children of the Wild.

A little girl was singing, a little, winsome girl with a sweet childish voice and an innocent face. How terribly out of place she looked in that palace of sin. She sang a simple, old-world song full of homely pathos and gentle feeling. As she sang she looked down on those furrowed faces, and I saw that many eyes were dimmed with tears.

As the last echo died away the audience rose as one man, and shower of nuggets pelted on the stage. Here was something that touched their hearts, stirred in them strange memories of tenderness, brought before them half-forgotten scenes of fireside happiness.

The curtain fell. Men were clearing the floor for the dance, so I went downstairs, pressed my way to the door, and stood there staring and swaying, but whether with wine or

Cat Long Considered Emissary of Witches

Cats have bulked large in the thought of both the Old world and the New. During the first of the more notable witch trials at Chelmsford, England, in 1566, it was charged that a white-spotted cat named "Satham," which sucked blood, had taken the form of a toad and caused the death of a man who happened to touch it. An injunction widely followed was that cats must be kept away from a corpse to prevent them from mutilating it or from "taking the soul of the dead." Increase Mather wrote: "There are some who, if a cat accidentally comes into the room, though they may neither see it nor are told of it, will presently be in sweat and ready to die away." In eastern Kan-weakness I knew not. In the vociferous and flamboyant street I could hear the raucous voices of the spicers, the jiggling tunes of the orchestras, the click of ivory balls, the popping of corks, the hoarse, animal laughter of men, the shrill, insane giggles of women.

And as I stood there wretchedly a timid little hand touched my arm.

CHAPTER XI

She was changed, desperately, pitifully changed. All the old sweetness was there, that pathetic sweetness which had made the miners call her the Madonna; but alas, forever gone from her was the fragrant flower of girlhood. Sorrow had kindled in her gray eyes a spiritual luster, a shining, tearless brightness. Ah me, sad, sad, indeed, was the change in her!

Her lips moved:

"How you have changed!"

"Yes, Berna, I have been ill. But you, you too have changed."

"Yes," she said very slowly. "I have been—dead."

There was no faltering in her voice, never a throb of pathos. It was like the voice of one who has given up all hope, the voice of one who has arisen from the grave.

"Come upstairs where we can talk," said she. So we sat down in one of the boxes, while a great freezing shadow seemed to fall and wrap us around. We were like two pale ghosts meeting in the misty gulfs beyond the grave.

"And why did you not come?" she asked.

"I would have sold my soul to come. I was ill, desperately ill, nigh to death. I was in the hospital. For two weeks I was delirious, raving of you, trying to get to you, making myself a hundred times worse because of you. But what could I do? I was out of my mind, weak as a child, fighting for my life. That was why I did not come."

When I began to speak she started. As I went on she drew a quick, choking breath. Then she listened ever so I tingled from head to foot with a strange, pleasing warmth.

Intently, and when I had finished a great change came over her. When she spoke her voice was a whisper.

"And they lied to me. They told me you were too eager gold-getting to think of me; that you were in love with some other woman out there; that you cared no more for me. They lied to me. Well, it's too late now."

She laughed, and the once tuneful voice was harsh and grating. Still were her eyes blank with misery.

I longer to comfort her, to kiss that face so white and worn and fearful, to bring tears to those hopeless eyes. There seemed to grow in me a greater hunger for the girl than ever before, a longing to bring joy to her again, to make her forget. What did it all matter? She was still my love. I yearned for her. We both had suffered, both been through the furnace. Surely from it would come the love that passeth understanding.

"Berna," I said, "it is not too late. We have both been miserably duped. Never mind, Berna, we will forget all. I love you. Let us forget and go away and be happy."

It seemed as if my every word was like a stab to her. The sweet face was tragically wretched.

"Oh no," she answered. "It can never be. You think it can, but it can't. You could not forget. I could not forget. We would both be thinking; always, always torturing each other. Our home would be a haunted one, a place of ghosts. Never again can there be joy between you and me. It's too late, too late!"

She was choking back the sobs now, but still the tears did not come.

"Berna," I said gently, "I think I could forget. Please give me a chance to prove it. I know it was not your fault. I know that spiritually you are the same pure girl you were before."

"No, I was not to blame. When you failed to come I grew desperate. When I wrote you and still you failed to come I was almost distracted. Night and day he was persecuting me. The others gave me no peace. If ever a poor girl was hounded to dishonor I was. Yet I had made up my mind to die rather than yield. Oh, it's too horrible."

"Never mind, dear, don't tell me about it."

"When I awoke to life sick, sick for many days, I wanted to die, but I could not. I was so weak, so ill, so indifferent to everything that it did not seem to matter. That was where I made my mistake. I should have killed myself. Oh, there's something in us all that makes us cling to life in spite of shame! But I would never let him come near me again! And though, when he went away, I've gone into this life, there's never been anyone else. I've danced with them, laughed with them, but that's all. You believe me?"

"Yes, dear."

"Thank God for that! And now we must say good-by. I would not spoil your life. You know how proud I am, how sensitive. I would not give you such a I. Once I would have given myself to you gladly, but now—please go away. Leave me, please."

"To death, ruin—I don't know what. If I'm strong enough I will die. If I am weak I will sink in the mire."

"Berna, will you marry me?"

"No! No! No!"

"Berna, I will never leave you. Here I tell you frankly, plainly, I don't know whether or not you still love me—you haven't said a word to show it—but I know I love you, and I will love you as long as life lasts. I will never leave you. Listen to me, dear: let us go away, far, far away. You will forget, I will forget. Come with me, O my love! Have pity on me, Berna, have pity. Marry me. Be my wife."

She merely shook her head, sitting there cold as a stone.

"Then," I said, "if you call yourself dishonored, I, too, become dishonored. We will go down together, you and I. Oh, I would rather sink with you, dear, than rise with the angels. You have chosen—well, I, too, have chosen. You will see me steep myself in shame, then when I am a hundred shades blacker than you can ever hope to be, my angel, you will stoop and pity me. I'll go down together, dear. Hand in hand hellward we'll go down, we'll go down."

She was looking at me in a frightened way. A madness seemed to have gotten into me.

"Berna, you're on the dance halls. You're at the mercy of the vilest wretch that's got an ounce of gold in his filthy poke. They can buy you as they buy white flesh everywhere on earth. Berna, I can buy you. Come, dance with me, drink with me. We'll live, live. We'll eat, drink and be merry. On with the dance! Oh, for the joy of life! Since you'll not be my love you'll be my light-of-love. Come, Berna, come!"

I paused. With head lying on the cushioned edge of the box she was crying.

"Will you come?" I asked again. She did not move.

"Then," said I, "there are others, and I have money, lots of it. I can buy them. I am going down into the vortex. Look on and watch me."

It is with shame I write the following pages. Would I could blot them out of my life. To this day there must be many who remember my meteoric career in the firmament of fast life. It did not last long, but in less than a week I managed to squander a small fortune.

I drink and I drink. It seems to me I am always drinking. Rarely do I eat. I am one of half a dozen spectacular "live ones." All the camp is talking of us, but it seems to me I lead the bunch in the race to ruin. I wonder what Berna thinks of it all. Was there ever such a sensitive creature? Where did she get that obstinate pride?

Remonstrantly the Prodigal speeds to town.

"Are you crazy?" he cries. "I don't mind you making an ass of yourself, but lushing around all that coin the way you're doing—it's wicked; it makes me sick. Come home at once."

"I won't," I say. "What if I am crazy? Isn't it my money? When the money's done I'll quit. I'm having the time of my life. Don't come spoiling it with your precepts."

He goes away shaking his head.

Rich Deposit of Rare Ore

What is declared to be the only known commercial deposit of brucite, a rare mineral that can be used where other magnesium compounds are now employed, has been discovered and opened to some extent near Lunenburg, N. S. says Popular Mechanics Magazine. A prospector accidentally stumbled across the ore and at first had no idea of its character or its value. He had samples analyzed and the findings were that the deposit may yield a fortune for the discoverer.

PRAISES COMMUNITY NEWSPAPERS

An exceptionally fine tribute was paid to the community press by Congressman J. B. Aswell of Louisiana in a recent speech, in which he said, in part:

"The community newspaper is the most thoroughly read publication. It is essentially the family or community newspaper. It is a community enterprise—a sort of public institution. The character of the news requires reading from cover to cover. Advantages to an advertiser, whether local or national, in a newspaper of this kind are obvious.

"The community newspapers, co-operating with the local civic organizations, can be made our most constructive force in promoting better agriculture, better business, and in attracting worthy people and new industries. The many services the community editor renders can not be measured in dollars and cents."

CAREFULNESS AVERTS ACCIDENTS

Motor Commissioner R. B. Stoeckel of Connecticut believes that constant education of drivers in safe practices will be the greatest factor in reducing the appalling casualty list from automobile accidents.

He holds that no person can be a good driver unless "he thinks about his driving every moment while he is out." He must regard every one he meets on the road as a "potential trouble-maker." Calmness in driving he holds to be more important than "perfect ability to handle the wheel."

Automobile accidents show a 10 per cent increase this year over 1928. Attributable causes are many and varied, but it cannot be disputed that carefulness on the part of all concerned would avert at least 90 per cent of them.

A scientific work discloses that comets sometimes progress backward. A case of the tail wagging the comet.

MUST RAISE BILLIONS

According to a recent Associated Press dispatch, an annual survey of public utilities indicates that more than three and a half billion dollars of new capital will be required for the further expansion of electric, gas and other utilities during the next five years.

This vast sum must be raised by the sale of securities to the investing public, who now own more than twenty-five billion dollars' worth of such securities, divided among more than 3,000,000 individual investors. These do not include holders of railroad stocks and bonds.

The gross revenue of all electric light and power companies in the United States increased from about eighty-five million dollars in 1902 to nearly two billion dollars in 1928. Yet only 10 per cent of the nation's farms are now served by lighting companies, less than 2 per cent of railroads are electrified, and the lighting of highways and airways is only started.

These facts, the survey states, are responsible for the public confidence in the general soundness of electric power investments, and there appears to be no doubt that the added billions required for proposed expansions of the industry will be forthcoming as rapidly as they are needed.

PRINCE VISITS SCOUTS

Fifty thousand boys camped at the great world Boy Scout jamboree at Arrowe Park, England, were honored by a visit from the Prince of Wales early this month, which marked one of the big days of the encampment.

Wearing his own Scout uniform, the Prince mingled with the boys of all nations for several hours, watching their various stunts and showing great interest in the proceedings. At the camp of the 1,300 American Scouts he received a great ovation and was presented with the silver buffalo, the highest Scout honor.

A pleasing incident of the day was his meeting with Scout Brandon McInerney, the 13-year-old golf star of Rochester, N. Y., of whom he had already heard through Walter Hagen, who considers McInerney a coming champion. The Prince complimented him on his skill, and said: "You have a long way to go before you can beat Hagen, but always remember this, keep your eye on the ball and keep your head still."

This great jamboree, bringing together boys from all parts of the world, was not only a wonderful experience for those who attended, but an event which should contribute in some measure to the cause of international understanding and friendship.

TO AID POOR CHILDREN

An immigrant boy who sought and found his fortune in the New World has become a great benefactor of poor children, to whose relief and education he is devoting a generous share of his wealth.

This friend of underprivileged childhood is August Heckscher, born in Hamburg, Germany, eighty-one years ago, beginning his career as a clerk in his native city, and coming to the United States at the age of 20. He engaged in the coal business in Pennsylvania and afterwards became prominent in zinc, iron, steel, real estate and banking, in which he is still active in his New York office.

He recently announced a gift of $4,000,000 to the Heckscher Foundation for Children, to which he had previously given large sums.

Thus the name of August Heckscher is added to the long list of rich men who feel that their wealth imposes obligations and responsibilities, and who seek to discharge them by doing something constructive for mankind.

BETTER GET MARRIED

If statistics recently compiled by Dr. William F. Ogburn of the University of Chicago are to be accepted as accurate, those who desire to retain wealth, sanity, and even life itself, should get married if they are not already that way.

He declares that most of the inmates of poor-houses and insane asylums are unmarried. Also that the death rate for single men and widowers is twice as high as that for married men.

It has often been asserted married men live longer than single men, but a cynic once declared that this was not literally true, as "it only seemed longer." However, Dr. Ogburn's research seems to bear out the idea that married life is really conducive to longevity.

To be on the safe side, therefore, a young fellow had better get married; provided, of course, he can find some one who is willing to assume the role of the party of the second part.

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT CUTS COSTS

At the end of last fiscal year on June 30, the Federal government had a surplus of $185,000,000 in the treasury, five times the estimated surplus. During the year the national debt was reduced $673,000,000 and is now less than $17,000,000,000.

The policy of retrenchment in Federal expenditures, established a few years ago, has resulted in the conversion of savings into tax reduction for the people. Within eight years nearly two million people have been relieved entirely of Federal taxation.

And now President Hoover has announced that a careful study is being made to determine the possibilities for reducing Federal taxes in the future. This will probably be done.

Nothing will arouse the sympathy of the average male quicker than a pretty woman who admits that she is unhappily married.

A $120,000 BIBLE

An idea of the amazing amount of money represented by literary and art treasures brought to America during recent years may be suggested by the price of $120,000 paid by an American collector for a Gutenberg bible, printed at Mainz, Germany, on the world's first printing press. This represents the highest price ever paid for a single book, but within a few years it may bring a great deal more. A similar bible sold for only $2,500 about eighty years ago.

When the late J. P. Morgan, the elder, died in 1913, his art treasures were valued at close to $100,000,000. His manuscripts included the originals of nine novels by Sir Walter Scott, Dickens' "The Christmas Carol," Thackeray's "Vanity Fair," and many works by Keats, Poe, Whittier, Longfellow and others. A single purchase of 700 books was made by Mr. Morgan in 1902 for the sum of a million and a quarter dollars.

The late Henry Huntington left a collection for which he paid about twenty millions, and it would bring much more today. The finest collection of Shakespeare's works in existence is in the Folger library in Brooklyn.

Europeans have long deplored the acquisition of their literary and art treasures by Americans, but so long as they are so highly prized by our wealthy men they will continue to come to our shores.

But with all their wealth and enthusiasm for rare books, few Americans would pay as much as $120,000 for a bible.

We notice a falling off of pedestrian jokes. Probably because pedestrians are fewer.

CALIFORNIA NEWS BRIEFS

Willows Civic Organizations have initiated a movement for a municipally owned water works. The taking over of the gas and electricity departments of the Pacific Gas and Electric Company is also being advocated.

Preparations for a great air show September 1-2 were being formulated by Salinas Post No. 31, American Legion. The show will consist of nearly every form of aerial maneuvering, and many fliers from over California are expected.

Rates on lumber and lumber products shipped to Oroville from California and Oregon points have been reduced 4 cents by the Southern Pacific Railroad through efforts of the industrial committee of the Oroville Chamber of Commerce.

Another industrial plant may move to San Leandro. An eastern paint company took an option on a two-acre parcel of land. Mayor Jerry W. DeCou, who conferred with officials of the company, said that plans were being prepared to erect a three-unit plant which will call for the employment of 200 persons.

There are 189 licensed real estate men in Stanislaus county, according to figures announced by Glenn Willaman, secretary of the California Real Estate Association, through the official organ of the organization, the California Real Estate Magazine. Altogether there are 50,910 real estate licenses in California. Of this number 30,339, or 60 per cent, are in Los Angeles county.

State institutions, including hospitals, prisons, homes for the deaf and blind and industrial schools, have a combined population of 31,590 persons, according to Earl E. Jensen, State director of institutions. This is an increase of 171 over his last quarterly statement. Folsom prison has 2223 inmates, and San Quentin 4249, including 106 women. State hospitals house 15,473 patients, while 2372 girls and boys are in the industrial schools. There are 3802 patients in the Pacific Colony in Los Angeles county.

Establishment of the army air base north of San Rafael will be made within a year, it was learned recently. The Seventh Pursuit Group, now stationed at San Pedro, will be ordered to the new field, in order to give the naval air forces the North Island field now overcrowded with both the army and navy bases. The San Rafael site recently was selected, together with one at Alameda, and the War Department plans to spend $5,000,000 on each field.

For the first time in history travel will continue all winter across Sutter Basin without interruption. Although legal delays will not permit paving of the highway projected by the joint Sutter-Yolo district, just formed, Sutter county Supervisors plan to maintain a gravel surfaced highway. The causeway over Sutter by-pass, built by the State, will be ready for use this winter. Next year the paved highway will give the bay district a better route to Northern California.

Construction of new state roads in Mendocino county is opening up a new area of mountain scenery for the motorist. Residents of Fort Bragg contend that the county contains some of the most inspiring scenery in the state, with its wild redwood forests, numerous fishing streams and other mountain attractions. Citizens of the town point out that scenery had much to do with the establishment of the town, for when it was established by Lieutenant Heintzelman in 1856 as an Indian reservation, wild mountain characteristics, among which the Indian would feel at home, entered into its location as headquarters.

By the narrow margin of $139, G. W. Cushing, Richmond paving contractor now engaged in paving Alhambra avenue in Martinez won the contract to pave numerous streets in recently annexed residential districts of Antioch with a bid of $48,445.18. Cushing was the lowest of eight bidders whose tenders ranged upward to $55,000. M. J. Bevanda crowded Cushing close for the ward, his bid being only $139 over that of the Richmond contractor. The streets to be paved with concrete lie south of Tenth street and will complete the paving of the city's streets.

Youths of California are "being educated before they grow up" and are turned out of school rooms into a matter of fact world, unable to apply the knowledge they have acquired, Vierling Kersey, state superintendent of public instruction, declares. "Fact centered" instruction employed in California public schools in the education of children will in time give way to "child centered" methods of instruction, Kersey predicts. There will be a day when report cards recording the fact assimilation grade of the student is passe. Pupils will be educated in life experiences—those they must face when they have left their teacher in the classroom, he believes, and the schools will endeavor to develop qualities of manhood and womanhood in children.

At the request of the city council, Guy Windrum, secretary of the Chamber of Commerce took up with C. H. Purcell, state highway engineer, the matter of the city of Madera voting out from within the city limits that portion of the state highway extending about half a mile north of the city from the south bank of the Fresno river.

A 24-inch beacon and an 18-inch blinker beacon were installed at the Concord Airport. The installation was made by D. K. Wilson, engineer for the Department of Commerce.

COOKING VEGETABLES

Caroline B. King, culinary expert, who has been one of the investigators in the study of proper cooking and seasoning of vegetables, says about the use of sugar in cookery: "Care and discrimination must be observed in adding sugar, and we should keep in mind the fact that it is used not primarily for its sweetening qualities, but to intensify and restore the vegetable's natural flavor." This holds for fresh, canned and dried vegetables. The following are some recipes recommended:

Spinach Hainault.—Clean spinach well and cook for ten minutes in as little water as possible; usually enough will cling to the leaves after they have been washed. Chop fine and drain well. Fry three or four thin slices of bacon, cut in small pieces and add to the spinach. To the fat in the pan add one tablespoonful of flour, one teaspoonful of sugar, one and one-quarter cupfuls of water. Cook until thick and pour over a quart of the cooked spinach. Stir lightly and serve. Use the liquor from the spinach for the water, to save all the minerals possible.

Fresh Peas and Scallions.—Put one quart of shelled peas in boiling water and cook uncovered 20 minutes. At the same time stew a dozen scallions cut in two-inch pieces, in a tablespoonful of chicken fat or butter. Mix the drained peas and dust lightly with flour. Stew until tender, adding some of the water in which the peas were cooked.

Carottes a la Bourguignonne.—Cut 12 medium-sized carrots into 2-inch lengths. Cook until tender in salted water, to which a teaspoonful of sugar has been added. In the meantime, cook two chopped onions in melted butter until lightly browned. Mix with the carrots and dust with flour. Season with salt and pepper. When the flour is well browned add one cupful of soup stock. Cook gently for ten minutes and serve hot.

Cherry and Pineapple Conserve.—Measure four quarts of pitted cherries. Shred one medium sized pineapple. Weigh the fruit together and allow an equal amount of sugar. Cook the fruit and sugar for three-quarters of an hour after reaching the boiling point. Allow the marmalade to set in the sun for a day. Now pour into glasses and seal with paraffin.

Simple Desserts for Summer

One of the easiest desserts to prepare and one that takes but five minutes of time, is custard. Cooked in cups set in boiling water, the custard will be creamy and delicious with a few minutes' cooking on the range or in the oven. To one pint of milk, use two good-sized eggs, one-third of a cupful of sugar and a fourth teaspoonful of nutmeg. Cinnamon or any other spice liked may be used for flavoring. Beat the eggs slightly, add the sugar, milk, a pinch of salt and the spice. Pour into good-sized custard cups and cook until when tried with a knife thrust down through the center, it will come out clean. Remove at once from the heat and the hot water, place in ice water until cool, then near the ice where they will become cold. Serve with a spoonful of whipped cream, freshly grated coconut or plain as one wishes. This dessert is one that may be given freely to young and old, so it is an especially good one to serve often.

Tapoca in various guises is another well liked and simple dessert. If the instant tapoca is used, take one third of a cupful, add water to cover well and cook until it is transparent, adding more water if needed. It should be just thick enough to pour. Butter a baking dish, put in a layer of the tapoca which has been slightly salted and then add a layer of any kind of fruit, fresh or canned. Apples are especially good. Use sugar with care if the fruit is canned. Cover with sugar and dot with butter and bake until the fruit is done and the top brown. When serving apple add nutmeg or cinnamon for flavor and cover the top of the dish with apples cut in eighths.

Prune Jelly With Almonds.—Prepare a lemon jelly using a package of flavored gelatin, cover with a pint of boiling water or any fruit juice at hand; add lemon juice if the mixture is too sweet. Take prunes that have been soaked overnight and stewed gently until soft in the same water, using no sugar. Pour the jelly into cups to cover the bottom; when stiff drop in two or three prunes and a few blanched and shredded almonds. If carefully done the fruit will be in the center of the mold. Add more jelly after the prunes are added and set away to chill. Serve with a thin custard or with cream.

Meanest Man Takes Tots' Milk Tickets

Lynchburg, Va.—Nurses in the tuberculosis division of the municipal department of public welfare have a candidate for the honor of being the meanest man living, though they have not disclosed his name as yet.

The man saved up milk tickets furnished him for two children suffering from tuberculosis until he had the equivalent of $9.20, and took the tickets to the creamery and requested the cash. He got it and bought a railroad ticket to go out of town.

RADIO MURDERER GETS FOUR YEARS

Slays Stepson in Dispute Over Late Concert.

Sioux Falls, S. D.—With four years' imprisonment facing him, Robert W. Wiseman, Watertown, S. D., referred to as the "radio slayer," has been lodged in the state penitentiary here under sentence from the State Circuit court at Watertown. He was found guilty of slaying his stepson following a dispute over the playing of the radio in the Wiseman home at a late hour at night.

Wiseman, who evidenced little concern when sentence was passed upon him, entered the penitentiary with little show of emotion, according to Warden George T. Jameson.

In addition to serving the four years for second-degree manslaughter, Wiseman was also fined $1,000 and will have to serve 500 additional days in the penitentiary if the fine is not paid.

Wiseman was sleeping on the night of the slaying of his stepson, Gerald E. Ellis, when young Ellis and a party of young men and women went to the Wiseman home and turned on the radio. This aroused Wiseman from his sleep, and he appeared in the room and ordered that the radio be turned off. When his stepson refused to comply with this demand Wiseman procured a shotgun and ordered him from the house.

Wiseman had taken his stand in the entryway to the front door, and near the front door the overcoat and hat of the stepson had been placed upon a chair. It is thought that when young Ellis started toward the front door his plan was to obtain his overcoat and hat and leave the house.

He had to go directly toward Wiseman, who had the shotgun leveled at him and the slayer claimed he thought his stepson was coming toward him to attack him, and fired the shot which killed the young man.

Live in Same House 30 Years Without Speaking

Little Rock, Ark.—Two sisters sit in identical chairs on a prim front porch facing a busy highway near here, separated by a high board wall and a silence of 30 years. Two front gates stand side by side in the white-washed fence. Two front doors give entrance to the house. Between them, dividing into exact halves the front yard, front porch, the house itself, and 20 acres of ground on which it stands, runs the mysterious wall.

On one side sits Miss Sarah Mercer, a wrinkled old lady with proud black eyes, rocking the long years away. On the other side sits her younger sister, Miss Rachel, a slight and careworn figure, whose eyes speak of tragedy but whose lips are forever sealed to curious passersby. For three decades no word has been exchanged across the dividing line.

Two sisters and the man who could love but one, are the actors in the Mercer melodrama, and the man long ago disappeared. He was the sweetheart of Sarah, in the eyes of the persons in the community, but Rachel loved him as well.

Thirty years ago a storm raged in the old house, and then the lover was sent away and the two sisters were left to nurse their pride alone—one with only her memories for comfort and the other to endure the stigma of ostracism and to rear as best she could in a conventional community her baby son, the son of her sister's fiancé.

Buck Deer Wrecks Auto by Leaping on Radiator

Cable, Wis.—A car driven by Henry Crandall carrying an orchestra to an engagement was wrecked by a buck deer near Seeley, Wis. The deer sprang from the bank at the roadside, striking the top of the radiator. The animal wrecked the front fenders and headlights, ripped the hood open, and hung there until the car was stopped. The deer's leg was broken and he was injured badly otherwise. An old-time hunter cut the deer's throat and left the carcass for the game warden.

ROSY PICKS HIS "MONEY" HURLER

Milwaukee Brewer Pitcher Recalls Phil Douglas.

Who was the best "money" pitcher in the last quarter century? Was it Eddie Plank? Grover Cleveland Alexander, or Herb Pennock?

If you will permit Rosy Bill Ryan, of the Milwaukee Brewers, to decide, it is neither of this trio. Rosy's choice is the almost forgotten Shufflin' Phil Douglas, ten years ago John McGraw's ace-in-the-hole.

Shufflin' Phil, you may remember, was the bootleggers' best friend while on the pitching staff of the Giants, and his devotion to the cup that cheers prevented him from hanging up a record that would have put him in baseball's blue book right near the front.

"I have seen a lot of ball games and a lot of pitchers during my stay in the big leagues but when it came to a tough spot my choice would always be the Shufflin'. And Douglas liked to get into a tight battle in the eighth or ninth.

"He had nerve as cold as an iceberg. He might have been dozing in the sun somewhere and when they sent him in to relieve he would probably ask what inning it was and how many he had to get out. The first two pitches would go whistling at the batter's chin and then Phil would 'come down the middle' with three straight strikes. When he threw at you he wasn't fooling, either.

"I was with the Giants the last few years Douglas was in baseball and his temperance became so bad that he would 'hook' almost anything he had to get even the worst kind of drinking poison. His pay checks all went to his wife and McGraw finally issued an order that any player that loaned Phil even a dollar would be fined 200 bucks. But out in the center of that diamond, with the game at stake, Shufflin' Phil was the greatest the game has known."

Gonzales Is Best

For baseball's most useful utility man, Manager Joe McCarthy casts his vote for the veteran Mike Gonzales, sturdy Cuban catcher. When Hartnett injured his wing on the training trip, McCarthy called upon Mike and he delivered. Last summer Mike was the spark plug in the Cubs' almost successful drive for the pennant.

Sport Notes

Ed Brown will remain as coach of the Harvard crew, it is announced.

Frank Wickhorst, former Navy star, will be one of the line coaches at Iowa this fall.

"Sir Thomas Lipton is the world's finest loser." He should be, having had more practice at it.

Helen Wills says she never intends to learn how to cook, which is unfortunate considering how beautifully she serves.

Lieut. Col. Edward D. Miller, who served for many years with the British army in India, is known as "the Father of Polo."

Steve Hamas, all-round athletic star at Penn State, earned 11 varsity "S" awards during his career, extending over three years.

University of Idaho football players will meet University of Hawaii in a game at Honolulu during the Christmas holiday period.

Taste changes in sport as elsewhere, and we recall that following the British Open, Mr. Hagen was temporarily voted the greatest golfer the world ever saw.

When Mickey Walker fought Tommy Milligan in London and received $100,000 the promoters lost $60,000. They deny they will give Walker a similar purse to fight Len Harvey.

Few racing crews have been able to repeat their conquests in the Poughkeepsie regatta. Navy and Washington won in two consecutive years, but since the war no other school has done so.

THE NEW WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT

The following summary gives the essentials of the amendments to the California Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act, effective August 14, 1929:

The maximum compensation was increased from $20.83 a week to $25 a week. This addition will govern both permanent and temporary injuries where the wages earned by the injured are sufficient to increase the compensation. The death benefit of $5,000 was not changed.

An amendment provides for a second injury fund. An example of this is the man who loses an eye in boyhood, and the other eye while at work many years afterward. Under the new amendment, the industry will be charged only with the second eye. The life pension necessary for the totally-blind man will come out of the second-injury fund, as will all other second-injury awards which involve very serious permanent disabilities. The latter is built up as an outcome of charging the employer, or his insurance carrier, $300 each time an employee is killed who leaves no dependents.

The Industrial Accident Commission was given safety jurisdiction over the state and its political subdivisions. This amendment was introduced simply to prevent any question that might come up in the future, although naturally the state and its political subdivisions have always co-operated with the Commission.

The Industrial Accident Commission has power to suspend or disbar attorneys, for good cause, from appearing before the Commission, such suspension or disbarment to be subject to appeal to the courts.

An amendment gives the Commission authority to appoint not more than two deputy commissioners, to be selected from the staff, one of whom will have the right to sign routine documents requiring two signatures under the law. The other signature must be that of a commissioner. The purpose of this amendment is to prevent delay in the event one of the commissioners is away from the main office.

An amendment provides for 10 per cent additional compensation to go to the injured man, with a maximum of $1,000, when employers wilfully fail to carry compensation insurance.

All cases of serious and willful misconduct, whether the charge is made by the employer or the employee, or by an insurance carrier, must be decided by the Industrial Accident Commission, under an amendment to the law. Heretofore, insurance carriers, or employers, could reduce compensation, in some instances, on the claim that the injured man had been guilty of serious and willful misconduct. The latter can easily be confused with carelessness or negligence.

Two new bills were enacted that affect the safety work in California. They provide for the inspection of steam boilers and air pressure tanks.

Several bills were passed affecting the routine work of the State Compensation Insurance Fund.

A bill was passed giving to the Insurance Commissioner and the Industrial Accident Commission authority to supervise the forms of compensation policies and endorsements used by all insurance carriers. This bill will be of great importance to the employers and injured men of this state, as it will bring about the standardization of policies. The insurance carriers will be required to either issue a full coverage policy or make it very clear to the policy-holder that the policy does not cover the employer and his employees.

LARGE INCREASE SHOWN IN ADULT EDUCATION

The number of grown people going to school last year, according to the United States Bureau of Education, increased 30 per cent over the number that had registered for class work the year before. In 1926-1927, 200,000 adults were enrolled and that number increased in 1927-1928 to 260,000.

Youth has no advantage in learning over maturity, the Bureau states. It is inclined to believe, in fact, that when a man of 45 and a youth of 20 are set to wrestle with any problem that constitutes an element in education, the older man, because of his experience and judgment, will more thoroughly master it. The psychologists have held this view. The fact that they have done so has greatly stimulated expectations as to what may be accomplished in the field of adult education.

As the attendance of parents in schools for adult education increases it has been found that the attendance in day school also increases. The interest on the part of parents to gain education inspires them to greater effort to keep their children in school. Thus the result is greater than it seems to be.

PREPARATIONS MADE TO CONSTRUCT BOULDER DAM

Chief Engineer R. F. Walker, of the Denver office of the Bureau of Reclamation, has been authorized to increase his engineering staff because of the additional work that has fallen upon that office in preparation of the designs incidental to the construction of Boulder Dam. This is the initial enlargement of personnel because of the approach of the time for the execution of this great engineering task.

All appointments will be made in strict accordance with the civil service rules, selections being made from eligible registers maintained by the Civil Service Commission, at Washington, D. C.

No appropriations have yet been made of monies for actual construction of Boulder Dam. It is not expected that those appropriations will be made until the next regular session of Congress. That will be the long session, and, since appropriations usually wait until Congress are nearing their ends, it is probable that no construction money will be available until some time next summer. There will be no opportunity for those seeking for work on the great project until that time.
